

Food Allergen Awareness (Level 2) & Food Information for Consumers in Retail and Hospitality

The new labelling regulation that came into force in December 2014 brought a requirement for caterers, deli counters, bakeries, butchers, sandwich bars, cafes and restaurants to provide information on allergens to customers.

This course has been specifically developed to address the issues facing hospitality, catering and retail businesses. If you are involved in the preparation and serving of food then this training course will enable you to:

- Understand the new requirements on your business, the things you need to do
- Understand what the major allergens are and Identify their presence in recipes and ingredients
- Develop strategies for the control and management of allergens
- Communicate the information to staff and customers
- Meet your obligations under the legislation

The course covers the following topics:

1. Introduction & Legislation (what the new legislation means for food service and retail businesses)
2. Food Allergy (what is a food allergy, what are the allergens)
3. Food Intolerance (what is a food intolerance)
4. Food Products (what are pre-packed, loose and non pre-packed food products)
5. Allergen Labelling - Packed Food (how is packed product labelled for allergens)
6. Allergen Labelling - Loose Foods (what is the labelling required for loose food)
7. Allergen Information – Meals (what information is required for meals)
8. Practical Allergen Management (how to manage, control and present the information to consumers)
9. Distance Selling (what are the labelling requirements on distance or internet selling)
